May 10, 2012 Issue #40 Editor: Shirley Fossilson

This Week     KEITH KRZYWIEC
West Covina Fossil Paleontology

Keith Krzywiec is the Founder of West Covina Fossil Paleontology and he is becoming very well known for his interactive presentations about prehistoric West Covina as part of the San Jose Hills Puente Formation Surface Stratum. Keith will discuss our area's geographical history, as well as the marine and terrestrial fossils that are commonly found in our area.

Keith's 2008 Collection of Fossil Whale Skeleton

Thought for the day: Give a paleontologist a bone and they are happy for a day. Teach them how to dig them up and they are happy for a lifetime.

Andrew Clement is a native of Pasadena, a 2009 graduate of Walnut High, and a 2012 honors graduate of the USC Marshall School of Business with a B.S. in Business Administration. He was awarded a presidential merit scholarship and the distinction of Global Scholar for his thesis on the post-Communist economic development in Central Eastern Europe. His international experience includes an internship with the US Commercial Service in Romania and a business reporting internship in Maldives. He served as a Spanish translator for the non-profit Global Business Brigades in Panama. Andrew studied Polish in Krakow and plans to use his Rotary Scholarship to attend the University of Wroclaw for a master's degree in Global Studies, a European Perspective.

Last Week: Dr. Mike Hendricks

Our own Dr. Mike fascinated the audience with his recollections and slide show of the recent trek he took with his beautiful wife Laurie Thackery in the Himalayas. Mike shared photos of the many people and cats they encountered along the trail, as well as in the cities they visited. Now, he is back to a suit and tie life with his mountain view being that of Mt. Baldy.
