Anna Jarvis (1832-1905) was a peace activist and Rotarian-like individual. During the Civil War, she cared for wounded Union & Confederate soldiers. During her life, she also created the Woman's Day Work Club to address public health concerns. When she died, her daughter was unrelenting in her efforts to have her mother, and everyone else's mother, honored once each year. This began the second Sunday in May of 1908 and endures to this day.
